MARRIED LIFE ON $80 A MONTH

Mrs. Sutner's neighbor advises her to be more confident and not jump at hasty conclusions. Mrs. Sutner resolves to say nothing to her husband of his stroll with the stenographer. Molly Sutner was awakened by the Jack's climbing over into her bed and riding horseback by chugging up and down on her shoulder. She unhorsed the gallant rider and drew him under the bedclothes to give him a hug.

"Where's papa?" demanded the little man. "Papa has gone to work. Mamma was sick this morning and stayed in bed." "Are you sick now?" queried the child. "I'm hungry."

"Mamma had a bad headache, but you were a good boy and let her sleep, and it is better now and we will get up and have some breakfast."

When the house was straightened, Molly threw a shawl over her head and, putting on the baby's wraps, went over to have a talk with Olive Eilson. The doctor was just starting to make a call a short distance away and took Jack with him, so the women could talk undisturbed.

"I want your advice," began Molly. "Last night John left the house right after supper and was gone all the evening. I had done a washing as part of a program to reduce expenses and I was very tired. You know how hard it rained? Well, I got all up and down, and I decided to go down to the office and see if John was there. He sometimes has work to do evenings."

"How could you go? You had no one to leave little Jack with, had you?" interrupted Olive.

"It is only about a ten minutes' walk. I left the house open." She stopped and looked hard at Olive. "Before I got to the office I saw him pass with a girl, the stenographer. I suppose he did not see me." She stopped as if expecting an exclamation from Olive, but none came. After a moment's silence, Olive said: "What did you do?"

"I went home and got into bed. When he came I pretended to be asleep, and, after crying all night, I could not get up this morning." She leaned her head wearily on her hand. "So you have said nothing to him about what you saw?" asked her friend.

"Nothing. I dare not trust myself to begin." Again silence fell between them.

"I am very glad," said Olive at length. "Probably they had work to do at the office and he saw her home. Always believe the best about him. Never harbor a suspicion. You cannot afford it. Such thoughts react on themselves."

Molly gave a scornful laugh. "What an ideal wife you must be. A man could do anything he chose and you would keep him in him, I suppose. I wish I had been born blind like that, but unfortunately I can tell which way the wind blows."

"Alas, Molly, I fear you are reaping the harvest of suspicion. Don't you know you can't doubt a person and not have your doubts react on yourself and the person you doubt?"

"Pardon me, my dear, but you are talking the language of the loved wife, the wife secure in her husband's affection. My opinion is that all your trust would ooze out at your fingers' ends if you knew your husband would leave you if he could get possession of the boy."

"You do not believe that or you would not lie awake all night crying because he was seen walking with another woman. You know in your heart you half believe he loves you, and probably you are right. Even if you are not, you will get no love by demanding it. Love is won by harder means than that. This gulf between you must be bridged by your throwing into it all your doubts and suspicions and cultivating a faith in your husband."

Molly sprang to her feet, her face flushed with passion. "You do not understand; you cannot! I suppose I am to believe John loves me because he never says a kind word to me from month's end to month's end. I am to trust him because he leaves me alone and runs around with other women. Such things do not breed trust in a nature like mine; they beget hate and rebellion and they always will. It's like feeding a dyspeptic nothing but cheese and expecting him to get well."

She was trembling with nervous excitement. "There, dear," said Olive soothingly. "You are all unstrung from your hard night. You must have rest and sleep before the world will look normal to you. Promise me that you will say nothing to your husband about this affair, not now at least; not till you have had time to think the matter over calmly." She put her arms around Molly as she spoke.

"I must go home and get dinner," said Molly, pressing her hand. "But I'll keep still."

PICTURE FRAMING.

A charming picture framing idea is the use of wall papers for mats, says the New York Telegram. Not only dark green, gray, blue and red cartridge papers are used for mats, but the figured wall papers as well. One of the prettiest landscape pictures recently shown in an exhibit had for a mat a cream satin wall paper.

USING COLD CREAMS.

A cold cream that suits one skin to perfection will cause another misery. The individual woman must settle the thing herself, and if after trying several creams she finds nothing that agrees with her complexion it is pretty safe to assume that she has not yet found the right unguent or is using them all wrongly.

No species of unguent must be put upon the face until the skin has been cleansed of soil and softened by the warm bath. In the daytime the face can be cleansed occasionally with the cream, but it is better to get used to it only at night, for where the face skin is concerned there is such a thing as using too much grease. In the application of all unguents massage is half the battle, so the trick many women have of dabbing on a blob of cream and smearing it lightly over the face is all wrong. The lubricant must be worked down into the pores for the velvety softness desired to come, and after they have absorbed all that they will the remaining oiliness must be removed with a soft cloth. If this superfluous quantity of cream is left on the skin it only does harm. The pores get so used to the drenching that they won't act without it, and all that lies on top only hardens or gets rank under atmospheric changes. Many species of pimples and hard dry skin may be attributed to an over-use of cold cream.

PATCH POCKETS.

Patch pockets appear not only on coat suits, but on dainty sewing aprons. An attractive apron can be fashioned of dotted swiss, fine lawn or handkerchief linen. Near the bottom, at either side, attach oblong pieces of the material to form pockets. Then fill in the space between these upright pockets with one long pocket. Head the three pieces with valenciennes, and embroider the daisy design on each pocket before stitching it to the apron. Decorate the center pocket with a rosette made of pink or blue ribbon.

The spacious parlors were decorated in pink and white and the reception hall and dining room were decorated by beauty in red and white. A mass of lovely flowers in profusion made the home a garden of fragrance and beauty. At 9 o'clock a sumptuous luncheon was served and strains of sweet music added to the joy of the occasion.

The bride, who last June, was one of the sweet girl graduates of the Sacred Heart academy, was most charming in a gown of white crepe de chine, trimmed with real lace and pearls. She carried a shower bouquet of bride's roses and lilies of the valley.

On Thursday the happy couple left for an overland tour of California. They will visit San Francisco, motor down the coast to San Diego and will spend the winter months in Los Angeles, where Dr. Morrison will take extensive work in surgery. MACCABEES AT PORT HURON, MICHIGAN.

The state of Michigan had an event of importance on October 22, when the corner stone of the new home office building of the Woman's Benefit association of the Macabees was laid at Port Huron, Mich. The mayor declared a portion of the day a holiday and Port Huron citizens opened their doors to visitors from all over the state, and many from other parts of the country. The local business men had all arrangements in hand and had assured Miss Bina M. West, the supreme commander of the association, that the day was theirs to show her the appreciation they feel for what she has done for the city and for the cause of women and protection of the home.

Miss West was organizer of this society and celebrated its twenty-third anniversary by breaking the ground for the fine new building which, when completed, will be the only woman's building of its kind in the world. It will be concentrated the work of fifty-five states and provinces and of 186,000 members. The society is the largest in the world exclusively for women and is growing rapidly.

This year, state hospital service benefits have been given needy members throughout the entire territory of the association, and last illness and burial benefits, and sick benefits for wage earners were added to the already fine classes of protection offered to insured women.

Every member in the jurisdiction is rejoicing over the progress of this work and local Macabees hope to be able to take advantage of the offer of next year which will give them a trip to the Mecca of Macabeesism—Port Huron. Silver Review No. 1, located here will have a special meeting in honor of the event.

ANNIVERSARY ENTERTAINMENT.

On October 31, 1895, there was organized in Ogden the first lodge of the Ladies of the Macabees, now Woman's Benefit association of the Macabees. Thirteen women gathered together on that Friday evening to form a society that should stand for the protection of their homes and loved ones. During the twenty years that have followed the lodge has increased until today there are 300 members, but the same spirit of love and friendship animates them as it did the first women who organized themselves on that far away evening in 1895.

Each year the Macabees celebrate their anniversary in some suitable manner, remembering those who have worked in the cause during the past and always looking forward to greater achievements in the future. This year the women gave an entertainment on Friday evening, October 29, in the W. O. W. hall, 2320 Washington avenue, to which every member, her family, and all friends were invited.

As the hospital service has been put into operation this year, the guards gave the home and hospital drill, which has never before been put on by any Review in the state.
